

It's Supposed To Be Fall, LA

In case you are blessed to not be in Los Angeles right now, we are currently in the middle of a heat wave. The city I work in (which is not LA) has been topping 100 degrees for multiple days in a row. It's certainly crazy to return from Georgia and step into an oven!

Ah, yes. The reason this newsletter is a little late this month. Over Labor Day weekend, I was fortunate enough to be able to attend Dragon Con in Atlanta. It was a fantastic time! I got to see friends I had both never met before in person AND hadn't seen in half a decade. There were some awesome cosplays and informative panels.

Oh, and I might have placed Top 3 in Star Wars trivia. No big deal.

Squeezing In A Little Writing

With my traveling, I was hard pressed to find time to work on Beachouse Studios - but that does not mean I found no time! I am continuing to work my way through Book 4 and work with my team on Book 3. I plan to hit the gas on that one soon, which is still planned for a January 2025 release date.

As I may have mentioned in a previous newsletter, Beachouse Studios is divided into two "trilogies" that overlap each other. Books 1, 2, and 3 form one "trilogy", while 3, 4, and 5 form the other. Book 3 is in an unenviable position pulling double duty! But the third trilogy is coming together nicely as work continues, and I am confident this series will stick the landing.

(That's not to say Book 5 is the last you'll see of the cast and crew...)

Finally, Something That Isn't TV

The podcast sphere of my work continues to spin on. Gold Squadron Gays has finally finished the Bad Batch (contributing to that aforementioned Dragon Con trivia placement) and is taking a little detour to talk about Tales of the Empire for two weeks. While we haven't announced what comes after that (and after a one-week break for Bradley's job,) I can say it's not a tv show this time. Which is good, because we really need to cover something else.

For Light and Dice continues to surprise and delight me. I get to experience the joys of listening to the other team in our split party (Lysander, Korael, and Zero) while also still playing the game alongside our DM and Goz. We've wrapped what should be the final session of our split party, and we're all very excited to get the full crew back together again! On Jedha, where famously, nothing bad ever happens.

Yes, I Am Drinking A Lot Of Pumpkin. I'm Gay. Leave me alone.

September and October tend to be my last more chill months, while November and December are often chaotic. This year promises to be no exception, with the release of Dragon Age: The Veilguard among other things on my radar. Don't worry, though - I'll still be as busy as always.

I couldn't stop if I tried.
