

I Should Join The Circus

At least, on account of all the juggling I'm currently doing.

Mr Harker seems determined to relax, however, even with his customary sheets to lay upon (it's laundry day as I type this.)

He seems to have finally calmed down after being separated from me for a whopping two days while I was in Phoenix, AZ meeting up with my family. We visited the Musical Instrument Museum, and with 10,000 instruments on display, there was a lot to see! It helped to distract me from how many plates are in the air this month. I'm never not busy!

Goals Reached! (And What Comes Next)

Beachouse Studios launched back on January 31st. It's been an interesting month for me, and I've certainly learned a lot from this first book about our production pipeline. I did set a personal sales goal for myself, which I'm delighted to say we reached.

Thank you to everyone who bought the first book (or read it on Kindle Unlimited,) people who left reviews, and also people who have been out promoting the book. Y'all are incredible and the support blows me away.

Hearing reactions from people is one of the most fun parts of projects like these. If your reaction is "are you kidding me with that ending," never fear. Book 2, Second Shoot, continues to make its way through the editing and preparation process. It will not be a long wait to find out what happens next to the characters! I'm also about 3/4 done with Book 3 and barreling towards the ending to that one. We are still angling for a Summer 2024 release for Second Shoot and Winter 2024/Spring 2025 for Book 3. I'm as eager to share this story as I hope people are to find out what happens next!

I Don't Even Know What's Happening On My Podcasts Anymore

In the podcasting world, For Light and Dice is catapulting towards one of the most singularly insane game sessions that I've ever been a part of. The cast has really embraced the vaguely insane nature of the Star Wars franchise and... well, I don't want to spoil, but these upcoming episodes are preparing to be some of the most hilariously twisty episodes I think we've done so far.

On Gold Squadron Gays, we finally finished "Ahsoka." Our recap episode is set to drop on Monday and wrap up the series. Though we liked individual pieces of the show, Bradley and I had a fantastic discussion on that episode about where the show's structure went wrong, and it's definitely worth a listen. One of the hardest things to do when talking about media is to make sure that criticism doesn't fall into the bounds of toxicity or pointless complaining. While "Ahsoka" was not our favorite show, I'm proud of the discussions we had about both the good and the bad of it. As a pallet cleanser, we'll be finishing Visions Season 1 next before diving into "The Bad Batch" one last time.

In Like A Lion...

That's it for March! I'll have more details about Second Shoot in the coming months. Keep your eyes peeled for the plot details, the cover art, and a fun new character joining the ranks of the established ones.

(If you finished Beachouse Studios and made it all the way to the teaser, you already know her not-at-all ominous name...)

But more on that later. For now, have a great March, and I'll see y'all in April!
